

HOUSE SPARROW

Everyone can recognize this little bird because it is found so close to houses and farms. It will readily feed on household scraps and seeds from the bird table as well as insects.

I-SPY points: 15

Date: _____

LONG-TAILED TIT

With its plump little body and long tail, this delightful member of the tit family is easy to recognize. It is found in woodland and hedgerows.

I-SPY points: 10

Date: _____

COAL TIT

The Coal Tit has a black cap with a white patch in it. These birds are usually found in mixed woodlands and in winter form mixed species flocks to visit bird tables and feeders.

I-SPY points: 15

Date: _____

BLUE TIT

A popular garden visitor, these little birds are familiar because of their acrobatics at bird feeders. A gardeners friend, they eat more aphids than any other species.

I-SPY points: 5

Date: _____

GREAT TIT

With its blue-black head, white cheek patches, and yellow breast, this is an easy bird to identify. The male's 'teacherteacher' song is also a familiar spring sound.

I-SPY points: 5

Date: _____

